TRANSVERSAL

"In art, life, physics and biology the moment when two factors, even apparently discordant, meet and generate a superior harmony.

Law that regulates the harmonic relationships between the manifestations of being.

Transversal is an enriching relationship, which makes the opposites become complementary.

One plus one does not equal two, there is the added value of the relationship which is immense.

Between the locomotive and the wagons, to build the train, the most important part is the coupling.

Transversal is the union that does not mix things up making them undifferentiated, but that enhances mutual values.

An ugly word but it must be ugly because it must make people think."

PULSATION

"Life in the universe is expressed through pulsations: from the microcosm to the macrocosm (from cells to galactic masses), following different rhythms, now fast, now very slow and not perceptible to man. Light and sound both travel as waves: the tide goes in and the tide comes out, heartbeat and breathing both are rhythmic pulsations. Every living thing pulses and the differences between life forms are differences in pulsations. If I pulsed to the rhythm of that tree, I would be that tree."

RHYTHM

"Rhythm is the space-time separating an object from its transversal.

On earth every organism is composed of the same elements: carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, etc.; what determines the difference between them is the rhythm.

Colors are determined by the same reflected light: we perceive them as different from each other due to the varying wavelength (rhythm)."
